DREHTEIL + DREHMASCHINE – short characteristics

For decades technological change has not stopped at the cutting plants and especially the turning shops.

Until the 1980s, powerful machines were introduced to the machine tool industry, curve-controlled lathes were a key factor in industrial production.

The short life or low number of many products today forces the use of flexible CNC lathes. These modern machines help to automate work processes and can be adapted quickly to changed workpieces.

In order to bring these ongoing developments in the field of turning technology and peripherals closer to the manufacturers of turned parts in a compact, practical form, the journal DREHTEIL + DREHMASCHINE has been published since 1989.

This bimonthly journal deals exclusively with turning technology and reports on CNC lathes, conventional lathes, turning tools, controls, loading magazines, clamping systems, operating equipment, cleaning equipment, measuring equipment, etc.

In addition, the journal contains an ad section and presents patents, textbooks, fairs, etc.

The print run of the journal
DREHTEIL + DREHMASCHINE is 3,000 copies and is IVW-tested.
